Correspondence of the Hichmond Dispatch. STAUNTON, VA., October 8, 1882.

Judge Waller R. Staples, who spoke to a large audience in Shenandoah county yesterday, arrived here after dark last night. The Democratic-Club room was yesterday, arrived here after dark last night. The Democratic-Club room was soon filled and his presence requested. He responded, and to the thousands who have heard Judge Staples on the husting: the balance need not be told. He had but one view, he said, to take of this canvass, and that was Mahoneism. He presented the public record of Mahone in a manner with which his hearers were not generally familiar, and, sweeping from under the General the least claim he might suppose himpelf to have as one worthy of the gubernatorial office of Virginian, he left him stranded to the pity of all Virginians with Sherman. Forsker, Ingalls, Quay, &c., the malignant enemies of the South and our people.

Our candidates, Messrs, Echols for the Benate and Cochran and Lightner for the House of Delegates, with our corps of speakers and workers are now pushing the canvass in Augusta county. They were at appointments during last week, and from this time on there will be a general round and all the precincts stirred up for complete work.
